But if a case were pre-sented in which a person owning liquor or other property at the time a law was passed by the State, absolutely prohibiting any sale of it, it would be a very grave question whether such a law would not be inconsistent with the provision of that amendment which forbids the State to deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law. property without due process of law. While the case before the court attempts to present that question, it fails to do it, because the plea, which is taken as true, does not state in due form, and by positive allocation the time, when the detive allegation, the time when the de-fendant became owner of the liquor sold; and, secondly, because the record satisfies us that this is a moot made up case to obtain the opinion of this court on a grave constitutional question, withont the existence of facts necessary to raise that question. In such a case, when the Supreme Court of the State, has not considered the question, this its usual course to decide it. Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion. This case was argued with the slaughterhouse cases from New Orleans, and it was expected would be decided with them, but it has been deferred until now. Mr. Justice Bradley delivered a concurring opinion, setting forth that the distinction between this and the slaughter-house cases is, in his view, that in those cases there was a monopoly obnexious to the charge of depriving 1734: middling, deliverable May or June, 1734: middling, deliverable May or Ju ly obnexious to the charge of depriving citizens of the United States of their rights of property contrary to the provisions of the Constitution, but in this case the question is one merely of police of the Constitution of the
